

CLINICAL TRIALS, DRUG MARKETING, OFF-LABEL PRESCRIBING, AND THE LAW

Sandra Johnson, J.D., L.L.M., Tenet Endowed Chair
Saint Louis University School of Law

The intersection of off-label prescribing patterns and post-marketing clinical trials have raised legal issues in the funding and conduct of research and policy issues relating to the development and diffusion of clinical knowledge. Using recent government litigation against pharmaceutical firms in their research and marketing enterprises as a lens, this lecture will examine the way that perceptions of how clinical knowledge develops may inform prospects for future regulation of off-label prescribing and post-marketing trials.

May 2, 2006

3:30 to 5:00 p.m. with reception to follow

The University of Chicago Law School

1111 East 60th Street, Room IV

The School of Law is a locked campus; visitors must enter through the westernmost doors (to the right of the fountain and statue). There is a reception area on the right as you enter. Staff at the reception area will direct you to the appropriate room.

The Fallon-Friedlander Lecture series is designed specifically to focus attention on the leading issues at the interface of health and the law, bringing together students and experts from campus and beyond to fuel productive discussion across these disciplines and contributing to innovative research and training at the interface of health and the social sciences. For information on this presentation or the lecture series, please call the Center for Health and Social Sciences at 773-702-8600.