Episode 5: Place Matters

Why are your zip code and street address such a good predictor of population health? What policies and investment decisions create radically different living environments—some that are harmful and others that are protective of health? What actions can make a difference, particularly in low-income communities? Segregation and lack of access to jobs, nutritious foods, and safe, affordable housing have been harmful to the health of long-time African American residents, and now newcomers' health is suffering too.

Refreshments will be provided.
